Before engaging in this lesson, consider:

1. An active practice of empathizing is called validation and validation is an acknowledgement of another's experience, point of view, thoughts, emotions or behaviours. Validation requires us to set aside our perceptions while communicating our understanding of their experience.

Student Pre-Reflection:

Before you begin, think about...

- How does the word “empathy” connect to your mental wellbeing?
- When you’re upset who can you turn to? What things make you feel better when you are upset?

Provocation:

As a class, discuss the meaning of the word empathy as understanding someone else’s feelings or experiences. To solidify the concept, watch the following YouTube video regarding empathy:

<https://youtu.be/fFqIZP4Yb64>

Discuss the video with the class to have in depth realization and reflections about empathy.

Learning Task/Activity:

Students will be engaging with the Bethere.org website to familiarize themselves with different strategies that can be used when peers are demonstrating difficulty with their emotions and/or mental health.

Each group of students will be provided with 1/5 of the “Golden Rules” they will be responsible for summarizing the rule that they have been assigned – groups may choose or may be assigned.

- 1.) Say What You See
- 2.) Show You Care
- 3.) Hear Them Out
- 4.) Know Your Role
- 5.) Connect To Help

Information can be found at the following website .

Share this website with students on the Hub or MS Teams

Pages 1/5 will provide the information for each of the Golden Rules, students should watch the provided videos and read the text in order to create a summary.

Consolidation:

Students will use the knowledge they gained from their research to create classroom anchor charts on each of the Five Golden Rules.

Students may also decide to create a PowerPoint to showcase their learning – either should be encouraged.

For ease of sharing, put all presentations together into one digital file.

Students will share their findings with the class and will be the “expert” for their chosen Golden Rule to inform their peers.
